Playing this game makes me envy lab rats shot full of hormones deliriously navigating a maze for scientific study before mercifully being thrown into a snake's jowels to be slowly digested over the course of several hours.

At the very least I thought I was buying an intentionally dumb game that would have that cool, happy song in it from the trailer, which would at least make evading these generic poorly-animated "enemies" and repetitive (read: copy/pasted hallways, over and over) locales at least somewhat enjoyable in a delirious, braindead way. Instead of the interesting & funny contrast created by the song in the trailer, in the game itself it has spooky ambient music and an occasional groan from the monsters when they see you. They don't attack you, and you don't have any health or anything, so they instead just walk toward you and push you along down the hallways, I presume in the hopes of getting you stuck at a dead end to prevent you from progressing and thus making you load an earlier save (assuming you even play the game long enough to bother to make a save. Protip: Spare yourself the KBs used to create a save and just delete the game instead.)

Okay, are you ready??? In this game..... you walk around a maze (although not really a maze since you're given a map that shows everything, including the locations of where the items are you "need" to collect) to walk around, grab 7 gems (by going through the laborious process of tilting the mouse to look down at a 45 degree angle and then clicking LMB once) Then wander around the maze doing this another 6 times, while avoiding being pushed into a wall and unable to move by one of the aforementioned "monsters" You then return to the initial room where you entered the level to enter a portal, which upon doing so you are immediately transported to another set of hallways (no visual or sound effects just immediately thrown into another set of hallways) with another 7 gems to collect with another set of dumb monsters shuffling around aimlessly.

. It's "worth" your money. Completely "balanced" and "fun" 9/11 would play again.. Hi, I would not recommend this game for the following reasons :

- 6 / 9

something od siebie ok ?

. This game's title "Happy Maze" only gets one thing right.

There is a maze, but you won't be happy with it.
